MEMORANDUM FOR: CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICERS

FROM:

Scott M. Albinson

SUBJECT:

Statement by the Federal Reserve Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Office of Thrift Supervision on Application of Recent Corporate Governance Initiatives To Non-Public Banking Organizations.

The Office of Thrift Supervision along with the Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller of the Currency issued the attached statement to address questions the agencies received concerning whether they intend to require banking organizations that are not public companies to comply with the provisions of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act or the proposed NYSE and NASDAQ proposals. The agencies do not expect to take steps to apply the board composition, director independence, audit committee, auditor independence and other corporate governance requirements of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act or NYSE and NASDAQ proposals generally to non-public banking organizations that are not otherwise subject to them. The agencies, however, encourage all non-public banking organizations to periodically review their policies and procedures relating to corporate governance and auditing matters. This review should ensure that such policies and procedures are consistent with applicable law, regulations, and supervisory guidance and remain appropriate in light of the organization's size, operations, and resources.

Statement on Application of Recent Corporate Governance Initiatives To Non-Public Banking Organizations

On July 30, 2002, President Bush signed into law the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act includes a number of provisions designed to improve the corporate governance, financial disclosures and auditing relationships of public companies, including public banking organizations.¹ Banking organizations are directly subject to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act if they have a class of securities registered or they are required to file reports under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (public banking organizations). The New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) and NASDAQ also have proposed changes to their listing standards that would impose certain additional board composition, director independence, audit committee, and other corporate governance requirements on public companies listed on those exchanges.

The Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Office of Thrift Supervision (the agencies) have received questions concerning whether the agencies intend to require banking organizations that are not public companies to comply with the provisions of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act or the proposed NYSE and NASDAQ listing standards. In addressing issues concerning the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, it is useful to group institutions into the following three categories:

Public Banking Organizations:² The Sarbanes-Oxley Act applies to public companies and, accordingly, public banking organizations must comply with its provisions and implementing regulations. Public banking organizations that are listed on the NYSE and NASDAQ also must comply with the listing requirements of those exchanges.

Large Banking Organizations: All insured depository institutions that have assets of $500 million or more, whether or not they are public companies, are subject to the provisions of Section 36 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1831m) and the FDIC's implementing regulations and guidelines (12 CFR Part 363). Section 36 and Part 363 require an annual management report, and impose annual auditing and attestation, and audit committee requirements on covered depository institutions. Part 363 allows the holding company of a covered insured depository institution to fulfill these requirements for the institution. In addition, the FDIC's implementing guidelines reference and incorporate the

² Non-public banking organizations that are subsidiaries of public organizations may be subject to some provisions of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act through their parent companies.

SEC's requirements and interpretations concerning auditor independence.³ As a result certain provisions of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act relating to auditor independence are applied to institutions that are covered by the FDIC's guidelines.⁴

Small, Non-Public Banking Organizations: Non-public institutions that have less than $500 million in assets are not subject to the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, the NYSE and NASDAQ proposals, or Part 363 of the FDIC's regulations.

The agencies have long endorsed sound corporate governance practices and have encouraged all banking organizations to internally review their operating practices and procedures to ensure that appropriate controls, disclosures, and operations are in effect. Existing banking laws, regulations and guidelines, moreover, already require or encourage all banking organizations, whether or not they are public companies, to adhere to corporate governance and auditing practices that are similar in many respects to those reflected in the Sarbanes-Oxley Act and exchange proposals. For example:

- The Interagency Policy Statement on External Auditing Programs of Banks and Savings Associations (September 1999) encourages all institutions to have their financial statements audited annually by an independent public accountant and to have an audit committee composed of directors that are independent of management.
- The Interagency Policy Statement on the Internal Audit Function and its Outsourcing (March 2003) encourages all institutions to adhere to the restriction in Section 201 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act on the use of the same firm for both external audit and internal audit functions. The Policy Statement also discusses the important role an institution's audit committee should play in approving all audit and non-audit services provided by the institution's external auditor and in analyzing the potential impact of any non-audit services on the external auditor's independence.
- Federal banking laws require that depository institutions file Reports of Condition and Income (Call Reports and Thrift Financial Reports) that:

Are certified as true and correct by a duly authorized officer and at least two, or in some cases three, directors;
Are prepared in accordance with accounting principles that are at least as stringent as generally accepted accounting principles; and

Disclose the institution's off -balance sheet assets and liabilities.

- Federal banking law and Regulation O (12 CFR Part 215) strictly control the ability of depository institutions to extend credit to directors and executive officers of the institution and its affiliates.

The agencies continue to believe that supervisory responses should be appropriate to the size, complexity, risks, and resources of different banking organizations. Our regulatory approach, as well as the approach adopted by Congress in the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, has sought to balance the goal of strong corporate governance with the recognition that smaller, non-public banking organizations typically have fewer resources and less complex operations than public organizations.

Consistent with these approaches, the agencies do not expect to take steps to apply the board composition, director independence, audit committee, auditor independence and other corporate governance requirements of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act or NYSE and NASDAQ proposals generally to non-public banking organizations that are not otherwise subject to them. The agencies, however, encourage all non-public banking organizations to periodically review their policies and procedures relating to corporate governance and auditing matters. This review should ensure that such policies and procedures are consistent with applicable law, regulations, and supervisory guidance and remain appropriate in light of the organization's size, operations, and resources.

The agencies also will continue to assess a banking organization's policies and procedures for corporate governance, internal controls, and auditing during the supervisory process and may take appropriate supervisory action if information indicates that there are deficiencies or weaknesses in these areas inconsistent with sound corporate governance practices or safety and soundness considerations.

In addition, the agencies will continue to periodically review their existing rules, guidelines and standards, and will propose revisions to these rules, guidelines and standards as appropriate to reflect and reaffirm the important duties and responsibilities that the directors and executive officers of banking organizations have in ensuring their institutions are operated in a safe and sound manner.
